Blue Wizard Digital releases Space Tyrant to closed beta on Steam.

Blue Wizard Digital is following up their debut hit, Slayaway Camp, with a wickedly amusing 4x roguelike that has just landed in closed beta on Steam.

In Space Tyrant, you'll build a terrifying space fleet, devastate planets, and slaughter peaceful extraterrestrials in your relentless march to total domination!

From people who designed, produced, drew stuff for, or ate lunch with the people who made Bejeweled, Peggle, and Plants vs Zombies comes a more sinister strategic experience with far fewer unicorns.

"We all enjoyed 4x and roguelike games but found our minds wandering to nearby squirrels, etc, during a typical session," says tyrannical overlord, Jason Kapalka, "under Blue Wizard Digital, we set out to make a zero-attention span mega-empire game, where you could have titanic space battles and huge galaxy-spanning conquests but not run over your employer-mandated allotment of lunch-eating minutes."

"We didn't care about winning any "cultural victories" or "Space United Nations" crap; we wanted to disintegrate guys and watch tons of weird spaceships explode. So there is a whole lot of that, plus collecting artifacts and leveling up and conquering planets and executing ambassadors! Also we hear you like cards? We have cards. So many cards, let me tell you."

But it's not all vaporizing mewling, hapless slavelings. While bashing your way through space, you'll eventually face off against the 'mall cops' of the universe - the ASTRONS. They might try to slap your hand and call your parents, but a truly merciless tyrant will plow right through these goody two-shoes. And to reward your unsavory efforts, a whole new empire will be yours to agitate. New races of scientifically implausible creatures to lord over, new types of frankly ridiculous technology to research, new commanders to throw into the fray, new cards to, um, do card things with.
